Example: define = define PRODUCT ;Target defined? endef ifdef PRODUCT endif The problem is that PRODUCT will not be defined until after the definition, as the product is only taken in as a part of the makefile and not part of the variable being set. I then tried to take the needed lines into a new rule of it's own but this didn't work either How do I detect if a variable is defined before it depends on it? A: Please note that if you are asking how to detect a variable being defined, you do not need to detect if it is defined at all; the variable already is defined (or undefined, which means it has not yet been defined). Typically
